

A clinical research study for Relapsing-Remitting MS is under way in your area.

Coordinators of the RRMS study seek participants who:

- Are 18 to 55 years old
- Have a confirmed diagnosis of Relapsing-Remitting Multiple Sclerosis
- Have had one relapse in the past 12 months

If you qualify, your participation could last approximately two years, including one study visit every four weeks.

Have you been diagnosed with Multiple Sclerosis?

Clinical research studies have led to significant advances in the treatment of multiple sclerosis. If you have Relapsing-Remitting Multiple Sclerosis (RRMS), you could qualify to participate in a study to determine whether a new investigational medication is effective in reducing relapses.

Qualified study participants may:

- Help advance clinical research
- Receive investigational medication and medical exams
- Have access to a dedicated clinical research team

Research professionals are available to discuss the study and its requirements to determine if you may qualify for participation and answer any questions you may have.
